PUBLISHERS' CARD.

The Publishers desire to express their thanks to the citizens of Quincy for the courtesy and valuable aid extended to them in their labor of canvassing, and for the liberal patronage received for this, their first Directory of Quincy.

Perfection in a work of this kind—especially in a first edition—is an impossibility; but all that painstaking, systematic effort could do to prevent errors has been done, and we trust that all who give the work any attention will look for its merits rather than for its defects, and that our patrons—it is they who have made publication possible—will find it all they anticipated.

Although unable in our Historical Sketch to record the fact that on the eleventh day of June, 1888, the citizens of Quincy decided, by a large majority, to accept a city charter, or to note the changes that will naturally follow: still, we are pleased that this Directory is to be the connecting link—the joining of hands, as it were—between Quincy the town, justly proud of her past, and Quincy the city, whose future progress we hope to record.

That the business and professional men and women of Quincy are progressive and fully alive to the value of a work of this kind, is amply proved by the advertising department, to which the attention of the reader is invited, index page 324. It is evident that a liberal advertiser must, of necessity, be liberal in his dealings with the public in order to reap the benefit of advertising.

Respectfully,

W. F. RICHARDSON & CO.

QUINCY.

Although one of the oldest towns of New England, Quincy has but a brief history, brief as regards the years whose events it records,—but how full to overflowing of those heroic efforts and noble successes which the world has witnessed with hope-lifted face. Brief, indeed, but these years have seen, here and there, along our shores, small colonies of strong, faith-led people settling down like wind-blown seeds on untried soils; a war of extermination against the natives whose ancestors had been buried here for unknown years; a rebellion and successful war for independence against the mother country; a rapid development in wealth, power and refinement; a successful war of conquest waged with the sister Republic at the South, and a fierce and bloody struggle between brothers occupying different sections of this “Federation of Nations,” resulting in another and long step forward. All this, accompanied with a most wonderful changing from the narrow and exclusive views of the Puritan, to the broad and all-receiving thoughts of his children.

The Indians had no written records and their interesting oral traditions were not given to the “pale face” who was so soon to dispossess them, and whose interest, in those early times, was that they should be forgotten.

The first recorded events which interest us, chronicle the voyages of the Norsemen, A. D. 1000, to these shores, but not enough in detail to make them of local interest.

As the result of the discoveries of Columbus further South, 1497, these shores were visited as early as 1605 by Champlain and others. They were kindly received by the natives who recognized in them a superior race. In 1607 the English planted a colony at Jamestown, Va. Here the active and enterprising Capt. John Smith played a conspicuous part, and by his bravery and address saved the colony from the double danger of the Indians and their own improvidence, while at the same time covering his name with a romantic luster which the years but serve to brighten. In 1614 he explored the coast of Northern Virginia, as New England was then called, and made a chart, which is still extant. His descriptions and conclusions were wise and accurate, and if the Pilgrims had profited by them, as they were almost persuaded to do while lying in Provincetown Harbor, 1620, they had settled at "Augoan" (Ipswich), and the world would never have known Plymouth Rock. He gave marked emphasis to the advantages and attractions of "Pasonagesit," (Quincy), and predicted its future importance. Capt. Smith describes the Indians of New England as a "goodly, strong and well proportioned people," and says of their country: "The paradise of all these parts, for here are many isles, all planted with corn, groves, mulberries, salvage gardens and good harbors." Between 1615 and 1616 these numerous peoples were almost annihilated by some pestilence.

In 1622 a company of sixty men settled at "Wessagusett," (North Weymouth), but the New England

Winter proved too much for them, and they would have perished but for assistance from Plymouth. Early in the following year they wholly disappeared, to be followed in the Autumn by a company under the command of Capt. Robert Georges. These were of the Episcopal faith, and remained as the first permanent settlers of Weymouth.

EARLY COLONIAL COSTUMES.

The spot distinguished by being the first home of the Saxon race in Quincy is near the present residence of Hon. John Quincy Adams. Here in the Autumn of 1625 Capt. Wollaston, with some thirty followers from England, built homes, and, no doubt, many "castles in Spain."

The Winter destroyed the castles and rendered the homes unattractive to Capt. Wollaston, who migrated the next Spring to the more genial climate of Virginia, leaving Lieut. Fletcher in charge. He in turn left the Colony being forced to do so by a mutiny of his men, led, as is claimed, by one Thomas Morton, a lawyer of London. Morton was chosen to govern at Mount Wollaston. He changed the name to "Ma-re-Mount," erected a May-pole and introduced other customs and manners, and observed religious forms, which were regarded as sacreligious by his good neighbors of New Plymouth, and they determined to rid themselves of him. "The Separatists envying the prosperity of the plantation of Ma-re-Mount (which they perceived beganne to come forward and to be in a good way for gaine in the beaver trade) conspired together against mine host, especially, who was owner of the plantation, and made up a party against him, and mustered up what aide they could, accounting him as a great monster, envying against the sacred book of common prayer and mine host, that used it in a laudable manner amongst his family as a practice of piety." Morton was taken prisoner at Wessagusset, where he was trading with the Indians for beaver. H says: "The conspirators sported themselves at my honest host that meant them no harm, and were so joccund that they feasted their bodies and fell to tippling," thus giving him an opportunity to escape from his six guards and return to Ma-re-Mount. Here he was besieged by Capt. Standish, who had concentrated almost his entire force for this purpose and now commanded an overwhelming army of eight men. Morton had but two men with him, the other five being absent. He was made prisoner in violation of a flag of truce and sent to England, 1628. He returned in 1629; was again sent to England, 1631, his house burned and his goods confiscated. He returned, 1643, old and poor, was heavily fined and died at "Acamenticus," (York, Me.,) in 1644.

An assessment was levied on all New England to defray the expenses of this bloodless, although at the time, all-absorbing war. Was it the first war between those of Saxon blood in America? Was it the most unreasonable of all wars, religious? It certainly was a civil war, which is always the most cruel.

We have given so much space to this occurrence because it so clearly pictures the feebleness of the Colonists; the objects of their ambition and the causes that prompted their exertions. 1628, an army of eight opposed to one of two; 1865, hundreds of thousands stand opposed.

Morton may not have been the best man in the Colony of Massachusetts Bay, but if his opponents were here today would they not use still more expressive adjectives in describing us and see many more reasons for confiscating our property and returning us—whence we came (?) ?

In 1634, Morton published a book, "New England Canaan," from which we quote that our readers may see their beautiful town as it appeared to him just 266 years ago this June. "And when I had more seriously considered the beauty of the place, with all her fair endowments, I did not think that in all the known world it could be paralleled. For so many goodly groves of trees; dainty, fine round rising hillocks; delicate, fair, large plains; sweet, crystal fountains and clear running streams, that twine in fine meanders through the meades, making so sweet a murmuring noise to hear as would lull the senses with delight asleep, so pleasantly do they glide upon the pebble stones, jetting most jocundly where they do meet, and hand-in-hand run down to Neptune's court to pay the yearly tribute which they owe to him as sovereign lord of all the springs. Contained within the volume of the land, fowls in abundance, fish in multitudes, and discovered besides millions of turtle doves on the green boughs, which sat pecking of the full, ripe, pleasant grapes that were supported by the lusty trees, whose fruitful load did cause the arms to bend; while here and there dispersed you might see lilies, and of the daphnean tree, which made the land to me seem paradise. For in my eye 'twas Nature's masterpiece, her chiefest magazine of all, where lives her store. If this land is not rich, then is the whole world poor."

1634 is claimed as the date of the first permanent settlement of Quincy (Braintree). The early Colonists were from the counties of Devon, Lincoln, and Essex, in England. Irish immigrants were forbidden, probably because of their religion. Boston was the favorite location in the Colony of Massachusetts Bay, and rapidly took the lead. In this year Mount Wollaston, some fifty square miles, was annexed to Boston by order of the General Court, and large grants of land made to encourage settlement. Among the names receiving grants of land, "with a convenient proportion of meadow thereto," we find Quincy, Coddington, Wilson, Hutchinson, Wheelwright, etc. Some of these lands remain in possession of their descendants—a pleasing feature.

1640, May 14 (old style), Braintree, which included the territory forming the towns of Quincy, Braintree, Holbrook and Randolph, was incorporated as a town, the inhabitants agreeing to pay Boston certain monies, and that Boston should retain certain lands and privileges in the town. This arrangement was the cause of much trouble between the parties thereto, until 1708, when Braintree purchased of Boston people every right. The commons (land) continued to be a source of constant irritation until 1764, when the last was sold.

The town at this time was in a very "new" state. There were but few poorly constructed roads; Franklin School, Hancock and Adams streets were the principal thoroughfares, and passing over Milton Hills formed the only route to Boston. Travel was mostly on foot, as there were but few horses and fewer "one horse shays," the only vehicle. Trade was almost wholly confined to barter, and October 7 the General Court made farm produce, cattle, fish, etc., legal tender for all debts, legacies, fines, etc., at prices to be fixed by itself. The people lived in the plainest manner on the products of their own lands. The houses were built of logs and thatched with shore grass, which was carefully guarded for this purpose.

SWORD, POT AND PLATTER OF MYLES STANDISH.

pewter dishes, with a few pots and pans, formed their cook-

and table service. Of knives and forks there were none, and many of our simplest household articles were unknown. The observance of Christmas, dancing, and games with dice, or cards, were crimes. The General Court took a minutely parental interest in all classes, and regulated the dress, the food, the ornaments, the hatbands, the length of hair, etc., etc.

In 1641 an act was passed securing to Richard Wright a complete monopoly of the grist mill business. To his mill, junction School and Fort streets, the people brought their pittance of corn, and depended on the meal produced for the johnny-cake and hasty pudding, which were the principal articles of food. It is said that the boy John Adams earned some of his first pennies by carrying corn to this mill for his teacher. The second owner of this mill was Major Gibbons, one of Morton's company at Merry Mount. It was discontinued in 1825. In this year, 1641, an act was passed forbidding the use or sale of bread in which was any wheat meal, as the wheat was needed for exportation, "for the buying of such forraigne commodities as wee stand in need of."

1642-3. The Massachusetts Bay Colony was divided into Essex, Middlesex, Suffolk and Norfolk counties. Not the present Norfolk County, as that was not formed until some one hundred and twenty-five years later. In the following year was made the first regulation to protect property in case of fire; all were bidden to have ladders attached to their houses.

1659. The town was plaintiff in its first law suit. It was a case against John Andrews and Benjamin Phippeny "for giving John Frizzle so much liquor as made him drunk and occasioned his misserable freezing." The town lost, and was unable to pay costs until relieved by the county rates.

1666. The General Court was petitioned for a grant of six thousand acres of land. It was represented that the land of Braintree was worn out and would not afford a comfortable support. The petition was granted, but no location was chosen for nearly fifty years, when they selected a place in Worcester County, which was incorporated in 1751 as New Braintree. Wages in these early times were low. A common laborer received two shillings per day, or ten pounds per year. Women earned four to five pounds per year. Board by the week was four shillings. Potatoes were not cultivated until about 1719.

1673. Until this date all town business was transacted by a few persons meeting at a neighbor's house, but now "It was agreed by the inhabitants of the Town of Braintree that all public meetings should be held upon the first second day of March and the last second day of October annually; and that there should be upon these days a general town meeting of the whole inhabitants to consult and agree upon all things that may concern the good of the town, and for the choice of town officers."

COLONIAL ARCHITECTURE.—THE ALLYNE HOUSE.

1675, June 24. The bloody King Phillip's war was begun by an attack on Swansea, and for two years added greatly to the burdens of those times.

1694, Dec. 24. The first appropriation for specific purposes was voted by the town, and the first town debt, ten shillings to Mr. Bass for ringing the bell, was ordered to be paid.

1696. The first vessel built in Quincy was launched at Ship Cove, Quincy Neck. Since this date there has been more or less ship-building at different places, but at present the interest is very small.

1727. The Punkapog Indians petitioned to have Col. John Quincy appointed to protect them from the injustice of their white neighbors. He served them faithfully for over twenty years.

1741. The Land Bank and other financial schemes established in Boston proved lesser South Sea bubbles and caused much ill feeling and loss in the Colony. Soon after this a movement was made to establish glass works in the town, and German immigrants were induced to come over and occupy some lands set apart for them at Germantown. Although every effort was made to plant this industry here it never took root, and subjected its promoters to suffering and loss.

1755. Mr. John Adams recorded: "We had a very severe shock of earthquake.

It continued near four minutes.

I then was at my farm-house in Braintree and awoke out of my sleep in the midst of it.

The house seemed to rock and reel and crack, as if it would fall in ruins about us. Chimneys were shattered by it within one mile of my father's house."

1770. The old Quincy mansion, now occupied by Miss Abbie P. Quincy, was built by Col. Josiah Quincy. Here he lived during the trying years of the Revolution and until his death in 1784.

1775. For several years preceeding, and until 1783, local affairs were colored or wholly obscured by the stirring events of the Revolutionary War. Quincy took a very active part in that struggle. She contributed many brave men to the ranks and gave many illustrious names to both field and Council Hall. We may not go into detail, but to show the terrible drain put upon the people, we quote from a letter of Mrs. John Adams to her husband. After complaining that no one would enlist, even for a short time without heavy bounties, she says: "Forty men are now drafted from this town. More than one-half from sixteen to fifty are now in the service. If it is necessary to make any more drafts upon us, the women must reap the harvests. I am willing to do my part; I believe I could gather corn and husk it, but I should make a poor hand at digging potatoes." The ill effects of the war were apparent and continued long.

As early as 1728 an effort was made to incorporate the north precinct of Braintree as a separate town. The committee reported favorably but the town voted "no."

This agitation was kept up until 1791, when the inhabitants of Squantum, then a part of Dorchester, united with the people of the north precinct in a petition to the General Court asking to be set off as a distinct township.

This was asked almost wholly for the people of Squantum because they were so shut off from Dorchester by the river. The Court passed an act of incorporation February 23d, 1792. This act was signed by Governor John Hancock, who was a native of Quincy. Many wished the town named for him, but it was decided to call it Quincy in honor of Col. John Quincy.

There had been some advance in wealth and home comforts since the incorporation of Braintree in 1640. Still the population, which was but little above one thousand, were mostly farmers who required the practice of untiring industry and economy to live comfortably. Their clothes were of homespun stuff made by the women of the households. The trade was still barter and the means of travel very limited. The amusements few and domestic, consisting principally of quilting, paring and husking bees, which were enjoyed by our fathers as keenly as we can enjoy the more delicate pastimes of today.

Morton of Ma-re-Mount relates that the brooks, rivulets and coast waters abounded with the most delicious fish and in such numbers that they were used as dressing for their crops. This, of course, made Colonial life much more endurable. Soon after the Revolutionary War the fishing business was enlarged, to be wiped out by the war of 1812. It rapidly increased until 1836, at Germantown some ten vessels were employed. In 1839 some vessels were sent to cruise for whales. These were successful. At present the local interest in this business is very, very small.

There was no postoffice in Quincy until three years after it was incorporated. It cost six cents to send a letter to Boston, ten cents to Springfield, and fifteen cents to New York, and before 1830 no daily paper came regularly to Quincy.

The granite business received but little attention until about 1825, when the building of Bunker Hill Monument directed attention to it. As a result, the work of quarrying, cutting and polishing this material for building and monumental purposes has reached large dimensions and gives employment to a large population of skilled workmen from countries not before represented in Quincy.

In 1826 was opened the first railway in America. It was built from the Bunker Hill quarry to near the Neponset Bridge to carry granite for shipment. It was operated by horses for over forty years.

1845, November, the Old Colony Railroad was opened. This, with the new industries engaged in, has changed the quiet country village to the pleasant suburban town. This change is most noticeable at Wollaston, where the bare hills are being rapidly covered with those beautiful houses and grounds which alone supply the growing good taste of today.

For particulars of churches, societies, schools, library and present business, see other parts of this book.

1888. That Quincy is a desirable and pleasant place of residence is proved by the many new homes built every year, and by the unsatisfied demand for tenements. Good schools and stately churches abound on every hand. Pleasant shaded streets invite to walk or drive. Her rivers and bays offer every temptation to the yachtman. Her people are intelligent and order-loving, and while remembering with pride the time when they gave presidents, governors, senators and diplomatists to their country's service, they regard the present with satisfaction and look forward with every hope to the coming years. These hopes, the writer believes, rest on a sure foundation—an appreciative people. The merchants and manufacturers are enterprising and progressive, and offer every inducement to patrons. STANDISH MONUMENT,

Captain's Hill, Duxbury.

Built by Standish Monument Association, incorporated. Corner stone laid October 7, 1872; will be finished this Summer. Height, one hundred and ten feet. This will be increased by a statue of Myles Standish, fourteen feet high.

This monument is of national interest, and should possess a special interest to the citizens of Quincy, as it commemorates one who warred successfully against Mount Wollaston in early Colonial times.

A BRIEF REVIEW OF THE TEMPERANCE MOVEMENT IN QUINCY.

Through the kindly interest and generous public spirit of Mr. Henry H. Faxon, we are enabled to devote some space to a review of the temperance movement in Quincy. In doing so we find much to surprise and interest in the facts recorded respecting our ancestors, whom we have been accustomed to picture as too strong and self-denying to be overtaken by any temptation of this nature.

1625. We have elsewhere noted the drinking habits at the plantation of Merry Mount, and Morton's accusation of his captors.

1686. In a sermon before a criminal awaiting execution for murder, Increase Mather said: "It is an unhappy thing that in later years a kind of strong drink called rum has been common among us, which the poorer sort of people, both in town and country, can make themselves drunk with. They that are poor and wicked, too, can, for a penny or twopence, make themselves drunk. I wish to the Lord some remedy may be thought of for the prevention of this evil."

1731. After considerable debate, it was voted "to supply bread, cheese, sugar, rum, cider and beer at the raising of the new church in the north precinct."

1750. John Adams declared that several towns within his knowledge had at least a dozen taverns and retailers who supplied the neighborhood with necessary liquors at cheapest rates. He considered his own town and county the worst off in this respect, and in 1761 had an article inserted in the town warrant to see if something could not be done to lessen their number. He succeeded in a measure, but fifty years after said: "I only acquired the reputation of a hypocrite and an ambitious demagogue by it. The number of licensed houses was soon reinstated; drams, grog and sotting were not diminished, and remain to this day as deplorable as ever. You may as well preach to the Indians against rum as to our people."

In those days every store kept a stock of rum, gin, brandy, etc., and retailed it exactly as goods of all kinds are sold today.

1800-40. "Quincy was very much what it had been from the beginning—a sleepy, conservative place. In 1803 the entire population of the town did not exceed 1200 souls, and twenty-six years later it was but 2000. They were all Americans. There was not a foreign face to be seen or a foreign accent to be heard. The blood was pure English, but the education was not English. That was wholly of New England. * * * It was a rugged, stubborn, gnarly race, that of New England, which I have endeavored to portray, accustomed to self-care and self-rule, laborious, thrifty, money saving; but, judged by our standards, those composing it were far from refined and neither abstemious nor self-contained. They had their besetting sins.

"Chief among these besetting sins was intemperance. I have already named the tavern as being—with the church, the town meeting and the public school—one of the educational influences of the earlier period. It was the rough club house and political debating school; it was also to many—to altogether too many—the yawning gateway of hell. Rum was the bane of New England, and it remained the bane of those who went forth from New England. No man, however, had a chance for success in life who did not keep himself free from this curse; and of those who went out from New England to seek their fortunes, it is safe to say that rum ruined, body and soul, the vast majority."

These words, spoken by Charles Francis Adams at the dedication of the Thomas Crane Memorial Library, can be taken as a truthful and vivid picture of the drinking habit in Quincy but a few years since. They should take all our pride of inheritance in this matter, from us, and give instead a feeling of gratitude to the individuals and causes that have led us up to better things.

1835-6. In each of these years an article was inserted in the town warrant to see if the town would instruct the selectmen not to license places for the sale of "rum, brandy, gin or other spirituous liquors." A very small majority voted against this each year.

1840. The Washingtonian movement was making itself felt, but had so little public sympathy that the Stone Church was closed against a temperance convention, which was to be addressed by ex-President John Quincy Adams; the tavern retained its prominence. In it was the postoffice, and the mails were handed to citizens of all ages and both sexes over the same counter with rum and its accompaniments.

After the War of the Rebellion had closed, the agitation against the licensed liquor saloons was renewed with increasing vigor. Foremost among the leaders appeared one who inherited from a long line of New England ancestry those qualities of self-sacrifice and steady adherence to principle which have "helped the worlds."

Henry Hardwick Faxon was born in Quincy, September 28, 1823, and is the eighth in direct descent from Thomas Faxon, who came of a good English family, and settled within the limits of the present Town of Quincy prior to 1647.

The boy Henry took his first lessons in the art of hoeing his own row in that best of schools for that purpose—the farm. Passing thence through the hard, but useful, lessons taught in a five years' apprenticeship to a mechanic, he has advanced in life's school through the grades of manufacturer, merchant, speculator, broker, dealer in real estate and temperance reformer.

In the latter capacity he has proved himself to be not only the council of war, but the executive power as well; not only the commanding officer, but the advance guard, the attacking column and the reserve force.

Wherever money is needed he gives it freely. Whenever there is earnest personal work to be done he does it—not for name, or fame, or fortune, surely; but rather because he sees, with the vision of a prophet the past, present and future ills inseparably connected with this traffic.

Largely through his efforts the Town returned to the custom of giving the business at the annual town meetings to committees and acting on their report at an adjourned meeting. This gave opportunity for more deliberate and intelligent action.

In 1881, Mr. Faxon succeeded in having the State laws so changed that the question of license was brought directly before the voters for their "yes" or "no." All were surprised at the result. The majority for no-license in 1882 was 600; in 1883, 628; in 1884, 660; in 1885, 492; in 1886, 757; in 1887, 792, and in 1888, 771. These figures voice the people's approbation more distinctly than words can.

This struggle—begun in 1761 by the clear visioned John Adams, but lost sight of in the years of great National peril—was now crowned by a noble triumph, secured almost wholly by this host of one. There may have been others in reserve, but so much in reserve that they were seldom visible to the enemy.

And now, citizens, friends, brothers, is Quincy better for this? Hear the answers:

"License was a great curse to Quincy, while no-license has proved a great blessing.

GEO. H. FIELD."

"I fully believe that in every direction no-license in Quincy has been a vast benefit. The hope of the future is in its continuance.

THEOPHILUS KING."

"Without such an active agency for suppressing the illegal sale of liquor as Henry Faxon has been, another town similar in every way to Quincy might find local prohibition a failure, while we, on the whole, have found it a success.

JOSIAH QUINCY."

"My observation in the matter is that it has been a great blessing to our town. God forbid that the time should ever come when the Town of Quincy shall again consent to this terrible evil.

JOHN FEDERHEN, 3D."

"In a word, I should say that temporal and moral prosperity have accompanied no-license.

EDWARD NORTON."

"These are a few of the reasons to prove that the enforcement of no-license has been of great benefit to the people of this good old town.

CHARLES A. FOSTER."

"The no-license movement is one of the grandest ever made for the sobriety and welfare of our town. We trust no backward step will ever be taken.

GEO. L. GILL."

"The cost of the support of the poor for the year ending February 1, 1882, was over $11,000.00; that for the year ending February 1, 1887, was $6,690.43. This reduction, to a large degree, is owing to no-license.

D. M. WILSON."

"My opinion in regard to no-license is this: That as far as Quincy is concerned I find no reason to say that it is not a very good thing for the people.

REV. FRANCIS A. FRIGUGLIETTI."

Senator Blair, in speaking of Mr. Faxon's work here, says that he is "a practical man, who sees to it that those who take the sword perish by the sword. Ten such men would save the United States."

Like all men who take an active part in any cause where men's opinions and interests stand opposed, Mr. Faxon has met with severe criticism, but his opponents never accuse him of lack of sincerity or with working for selfish ends. They all give him credence when he says to the convicted runseller: "If you will give me satisfactory security that you will abandon this liquor business, I will pay your fine and you may go in peace. I am not fighting you but your business."

Like the Yankee soldier that he is, he must invent and use weapons of novel design, as in these cuts he pictures the relative evil of the two callings.

THE HIGHWAYMAN vs. THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

Highwayman: "Your money OR your life!"

Rumseller: "Your money AND your life!"

PLYMOUTH ROCK AND SURROUNDINGS.

On Cole's Hill, at the left of the granite stairway, were buried those of the Pilgrims who died the first winter. North Street, leading up the hill on the right of the picture, is one of the first streets made in New England. The Canopy over the Rock is of granite, and was built in 1859-68 by the Pilgrim Society, which has active members in all parts of the Union.
